
Daikin France wins Gold for Interior Air Quality

Ururu Sarara steals the show at 2007 Enéo Exhibition

The 2007 edition of France's leading energy and climate control exhibition, Enéo, took place from 14-17 February in Lyon. The Enéo exhibition once again proved a major event in the French HVAC market, which is becoming increasingly important in Europe.

Receiving more than its share of this attention was Daikin Airconditioning France S.A.S., which played host to a high number of visitors and whose product line enjoyed considerable interest.

A highpoint for Daikin France was the Enéo d'Or awarded to the Daikin Ururu Sarara air conditioning/(de)humidification unit. Four such awards were granted by the professional jury – consisting of trade organisation representatives and the trade press – to innovative products that combine ease of use, energy performance, technological advances, ease of installation and maintenance, and cost effectiveness. Ururu Sarara took the gold for the category indoor air quality.

One unit does it all

The humidity level of a room plays an important role in perceived climate comfort. Optimum humidity levels allow greater comfort with less energy use.

Daikin's Ururu Sarara is the first equipment on the market to combine temperature control – air conditioning and heat pump – with de-humidification/humidification, ventilation and purification.

Ururu Sarara ensures a comfortable room climate year round, with high levels of efficiency (an EER of 5.0 in cooling mode, a COP of 5.14 in heating mode)¹. Impressive performance that did not go unnoticed by the Enéo d'Or jury.
